Stampede Adds to Executive Team; Welcomes Jeff Willis as New Vice President

BUFFALO, N.Y., January 31, 2007—Stampede, a value-added distributor of presentation and home theater technology, today announced the appointment of Jeff Willis to the newly created position of vice president, product management and operations. Willis brings to Stampede 20 years of wholesale distribution experience. Most recently Willis was vice president, category management for technology products at United Stationers Supply Co, Inc. and Azerty, its technology products division.

In his new position at Stampede, Willis will be tasked with increasing Stampede's operational efficiencies, increasing and enhancing the number of vendor marketing programs, growing the number of manufacturers Stampede serves, and increasing the number of product categories the company offers.

“Jeff brings a wealth of distribution knowledge and expertise to Stampede,” said Kevin Kelly, president and chief operating officer, Stampede. “We want Stampede to be better in every way possible and I know Jeff will create operational efficiencies and customer service improvements that will help us achieve our goal.”

While at United Stationers, Willis was responsible for the company's $1.7 billion technology products division, overseeing supplier strategies, operational efficiencies, the category marketing strategy, and the company's technology products private brand, among other responsibilities.

Both Willis and Kelly are past-presidents of the board of directors of Computers for Children, Inc., a technology products-related non-profit co-founded by Kelly in 1997. Willis holds a B.A. in communication/marketing from Canisius College and a Micro MBA Certificate from SUNY at Buffalo.
